1. Visibility of system status

The system does keep the user informed about what is going on through having highlighted on the boxes they are clicking on, it tells you what to write and where to write when filing a complaint

2. Match between system and the real world

The system is easy to under because it doesn't use complicated vocabulary and uses simple terms to guide you to a file complaint

3. User control and freedom

The system does not have a convenient emergency exit button to redo or undo an action. Instead you would have to restart an action all over again. If you were to submit a complaint by accident when you weren't finished with it you wouldn't be able to undo it or edit it.

4. Consistency and standards

Uses the same Report format every time so consistency is good and uses the same display on the entire product for other links such as product price match, user guides, etc

5. Error prevention

Allows user to file a new report indefinitely as many times so even if they messed up and they are not sure, they can always just submit the same thing

6. Recognition rather than recall

Not very visible to the eye, small letters compared to the entire product's page making it hard for the user to let it become muscle memory.

7. Flexibility and efficiency of use

No shortcuts for new users, both new users and old users have to go through the same thing of looking for the report button and the website does not offer accelerators to speed up this process

8. Aesthetic and minimalist design

Just the report form/tab is considered minimalistic however navigating to that page itself is very confusing and contains too much information to be viewed in one page.

9. Help users recognize, diagnose, and recover from errors

Not easy to fix an error once you've submitted the complaint, there is no button to show your previous reports so that you can proofread or double check.

10. Help and documentation

The system did help while filing a complaint by allowing you to choose the area of complaint you wanted to talk about and clearly has a section for you to write your complaint on. It also had steps for you to follow, with a yellow "submit" box to finish the action.
